

TRANSCRIPT: Big group musical engagement

Katie Cornell

Tim and Tom are two theatre practitioners and they first came to us through a theatre trip that we did, and then I invited them to come in when we had a creative arts week because they are so brilliant. And what we really like about Tim and Tom, and why we get them back over and over again, is because of their engagement with the students. They are able to engage with every student, at every level, in some way.

Outside they were doing a big group engagement and it's what they're famous for in school, because they come in and they'll work with a big group and sometimes it's story telling or sometimes it is just, sort of, song and some movement, and the big group get carried along with that, and it's really nice because they can all bounce off each other and have a turn, and there might be some that you see on the periphery at first and then they see somebody else do something and then they want to come in and, I think, it's really nice to have that big group engagement to get everybody involved in their own way.
